

Email Content - Exposing Your Business In Ways You May Not Realize

While content is streaming in and out of your business, there is also the alphabet soup of compliance requirements laws, corporate policy rules and potential litigation exposure your business content can be susceptible to every day. The net result? Today's rules of managing and protecting your business content, including email communications, have changed, and in a big way. The stakes are high.

E-mail is the one application that needs attention, no matter what industry your company is in.

How well your company intelligently manages content can make or break your business.

Email - The Most Permanent Form Of Business Content

Your business generates huge volumes of information in various flavors and formats. Email users often act as if email is a transient form of communication and treat its content casually. But email is decidedly permanent, especially with its meta-data characteristics. And given that an individual email may only be one in a series; email communication makes substantive context difficult.

Given these characteristics, it is no surprise that 75% of discovery requests are now focusing on email.

75% of litigation discovery requests are now focusing on EMAIL

"With the surge of lawsuits requiring companies to produce electronic records as evidence, preserving messages is a matter of great importance to virtually all companies. Without an email archiving solution, it is not uncommon for a company to spend a million dollars trying to recover one or two required messages from backup tapes via a laborious and time-consuming manual process, which can take weeks or even months to complete."
